Search Tips

Operators Used in Keyword Searches

Operators are the rules or specific instructions used in a keyword search for composing the question or query. You begin a keyword search by placing your query in the search box of the search engine's home page. To construct the query, use the appropriate operators for the selected search engine. While each search engine has its own operators, some are common to a number of search engines. The following describes the more frequently used operators, each of which is shown as a numbered heading.

1. Boolean Employs AND, OR, NEAR and NOT to connect words and phrases (i.e., term) in the query wherein: AND requires that both terms are present somewhere within the document being sought. NEAR requires that one term must be found within a specified number of words. OR requires that at least one term is present. NOT excludes term from query.

When using these operators, remember to capitalize them as shown above, and do not leave a space between the operator and the term that follows.

Example - labor AND history

2. Plus / Minus Signs Employs [+] before a term with no space in between to retrieve only the documents containing that term. It is similar to the Boolean "AND". Employ [-] before a term with no space in between to exclude that term from the search. It is similar to the Boolean NOT.

Example - +labor +history

3. Quote Marks Indicate that the words within the quote marks are to be treated as an exact phrase, or reasonably close to it. It is similar to the Boolean NEAR.

Example - "labor history"

Other Helpful Tips

Expand your search using wildcards (*):

By typing an * at the end of a keyword, you can search for the word with multiple endings.

Example: Try wish*, to find wish, wishes, wishful, wishbone, and wishy-washy.

Be specific:

Use specific words as opposed to general ones. For example, a search for "Lamborghini" will return more targeted results than a search for "sports cars."

() Parentheses:

Used to group portions of Boolean queries together for more complicated queries. For example, to find documents that contain the word "fruit" and either the word "banana" or the word "apple," enter:

fruit AND (banana OR apple)

General Corporate Financial Information

American Manufacturers <http://www.thomasregistry.com/>

Business Filings Databases - For many private companies, the only way to get information about officers and directors is through the annual report. Most states require companies incorporated to file annual reports and these are public records. These websites provide links to the state agencies responsible for business filings.
